Synopsis

One Maori multimillionaire. One fierce blonde. Another escape to New Zealand. What do you do when you lose Hope? You get her back. I'd lived my life on two principles: discipline and control. Well, until now. There's that phrase, though, isn't there. "How's that working out for you?" The answer, when it came to Hope Sinclair, was, "not so well." She might be little, she might be sweet, and she might be young, but if I'd thought she'd be compliant anywhere but in bed, I'd learned my lesson. To keep her, I had to let her go. To hold her, I had to turn her loose. To have her in my life, I had to accept that she was nine thousand miles away in New Zealand, in my grandfather's house in Katikati, surrounded by the loving members of my Maori whanau and much too close to the not-so-loving ones. All of that was killing me. On the other hand, I thought it might be working, so I was going to do it. No matter what.

Customer Reviews

Hope and Hemi are "fictional characters" who leaped fully into reality in this three part series, the Not Quite a Billionaire set. They were a subplot in one of Rosalind James' other books from her popular Escape to New Zealand series, and probably weren't really supposed to jump off the pages of that book and into a three part series of their own. However, this is the real genius of Rosalind's characters - they are real people, people whose stories grab you, draw you in, and keep you enticed until you see the results (and even then she sneaks in sub characters whose future lives you want to follow.). FOUND is the final book of the series. It takes these wonderful characters through some mighty tough times and decisions and personal growth. Hemi is a transplanted Maori man: calm, controlled, CEO of his fashion business in New York City, and completely stymied by his burgeoning feelings for Hope. Hope is sweet, gentle, caring, and fierce in her protection of those she loves. Can Hemi sustain that love, or will his nature dominate the situation and destroy the beginning of a life that they are trying to establish? Enter the power of negotiation!!! Hemi, master negotiator, has shared a few of his secrets with Hope, and she is a fast learner. She turns her new negotiation skills into tools to gently but firmly move Hemi into revealing his better, softer nature. And Hope, with her persistence, her loving care of his Maori grandfather, her strength, her strong desire to become a full partner to Hemi, just might manage to bring Hemi back to his Maori roots, and begin to heal the rift that has isolated him during his adult life. Rosalind always manages to make me laugh at the real people she creates.
